School sport

Each Australian student should have at least 45 minutes of sport each day.

I think that each Australian student should have at least 45 minutes of sport each day, so that the students stay fit and healthy throughout the school year. Then, when the schools have sports days, all the students will be fit. Sport also helps children with their coordination skills, which will also help them with everyday life. This will encourage the children to have good sportsmanship and to work well in a team.

However, the teachers would more than likely want a pay rise, or not want this to happen at all, because it would mean too much work on their poor backs! The Education Department might not like this idea either, as it would mean that they would have to pay out more money in wages.

Therefore, I recommend the Education Department employ an extra sports teacher at every school so that 45 minutes of sport would be possible. Then the teachers would not complain and the children would have decent sports teachers who know what they are doing.
